For the new year, pushing boundaries is a trend that is evolving and motivating luxury outdoor design. For the award-winning exterior design professionals of Ryan Hughes Design, the result is known as “Elevated Outdoor Living.” “Our teams of professionals are continually seeking to breach traditional boundaries,” said Ryan Hughes, founder and creative director. “This trend is taking place as much in function as form; but ultimately, by design.” Trends being captured in Hughes’ outdoor designs include multi-level planning in which outdoor spaces are being defined as well as expanded across elevations to accommodate greater experiences as much as topography. While accommodations for large gatherings continue, a trend towards equal consideration of unique individual personal spaces including custom decks, private gardens, or pool-side grottos. Fashion throughout is a trending constant, indoors or out. From features to furnishings, greater choices are expected with innovative outdoor durability in lounges to lighting, appliances to athletic implements.

Welcoming the New Year with New Aesthetics! Elizabeth Cinquini Interiors wants you to say goodbye to bland painted walls and hello to a new era of textured design! In 2024, interior spaces are breaking free from the monotony - welcoming textured walls to infuse warmth, coziness, and personality. From intricate wallpapers to custom finishes, textures are transforming spaces, adding depth and character. Wallpaper, in particular, emerges as a design superhero, effortlessly breathing life into rooms with its versatility and ability to tell unique stories. Whether it's the raw charm of exposed brick or the luxurious feel of woven fabrics, texture creates a multi-sensory experience that goes beyond visual appeal. Elevate your space with various texture to create a haven that speaks uniquely to your personality. It's time to bid farewell to monochromatic white and grey palettes and boring walls and embrace revolution of texture and rich tones shaping the design landscape.
